Ten Tone Productions will present the hit Greek dark comedy “Babades me Roumi” (Rum Babas) for the first time in Toronto, bringing a fast-paced, witty and outrageous story of greed, family intrigue and deception to the local stage.

Written by hit comedic duo Thanasis Papathanasiou and Michalis Reppas and directed by Elissaios Kyrillos, the play follows two brothers, their wives, a scheming nurse and a nosy neighbor as they hatch a hilarious plan to seize a massive inheritance. The only catch? They must serve rum babas – with one very special ingredient.

The cast features members of Toronto’s Greek community, including Rania Bampasi, Irene Bithas, Christine El Baramawi Lewis, Giannis Koukouvli, Vicki Raios Tranos and George Scandalis.

Presented in Greek (PG-rated, two hours with intermission), the production is supported by the Hellenic Heritage Foundation. Tickets are available through Empiria Events.

Performances will run November 20-22 and 27-29 at 8 p.m., and November 23 and 30 at 3 p.m., at the Alumnae Theater, 70 Berkeley Street.
